

S Jones Containers set to launch industry-first restoration service

Leading sales, hire and conversion specialist S Jones Containers is set to launch ClearRestore, an innovative and industry-first service with the ability to restore shipping containers paintwork back to near-new condition.

Using cutting-edge products, ClearRestore is able to restore worn and aged shipping containers paintwork back to near-new condition with a 58 per cent cost saving and significantly lower environmental impact than the typical approach of repainting containers. The service will be primarily used for the self-storage industry, and this is the first time the product has been available for use on shipping containers in the UK, demonstrating S Jones Containers' commitment to identifying innovative solutions for its customers.

The family-owned Walsall-based business is set to launch ClearRestore at the upcoming Self Storage Association (SSA) UK Conference 2025, which runs between Wednesday 30th April and Thursday 1st

May in Telford. The event will see leading figures from across the self-storage industry under one roof to network and learn more about the past, present and future of the sector.

ClearRestore will be front and centre on S Jones Containers' stand at the conference, with the business displaying a shipping container door that has been restored using this service so visitors can see its effectiveness first hand.

Glen Willis, Head of Sales at S Jones Containers said: "We're committed to driving innovation both within our business and across the variety of industries we're proud to support through our work, and ClearRestore is a great example of this. Our team has worked hard to create a service that will benefit our customers through not only improving the shipping container restoration process, but also saving associated costs and environmental impact."

“The SSA UK Conference brings together those from across the self-storage industry to discover the latest insights and innovations across the industry, making it the ideal place for us to launch ClearRestore. We’re looking forward to sharing the benefits of this innovative service with leading figures across the self-storage industry.”
